CONFLICT RESOLUTION

Even Christians, at times, will face conflict. We will likely have conflict with neighbors or coworkers. Sometimes our conflict may be with friends and family. But, as we might not expect, there are times when our conflicts enter into our church relationships.

Jesus, in Matthew 18, outlines the best way for us to deal with such conflict with a Christian brother or sister. This, He specifies, is to be used "if your brother sins against you" - if a fellow Christian has done something to hurt or offend us. Maybe this was intentional on their part, or maybe its not. Either way, resolving this conflict means that we must first bring it to their attention in a private manner. (v. 15)

Dealing with conflict is made all the more difficult when unnecessarily involving more individuals than is necessary, but if this "sin" is done in a public manner, bringing the seriousness of such an offense may require more than one "witness." (v. 16) We would not wish to bombard someone with a host of witnesses against them, as such could aggravate the situation even more so. However, if this sin is against the church, it may require bringing it before the congregation affected. (v. 17) If this individual still refuses to repent, he is to be withdrawn from, as if he is a "heathen" or a "tax collector," in hopes that he might realize his error.

In context, the audience Jesus is speaking to seems to be the apostles; however, this type of conflict resolution can be applied to even situations outside of the church, such as in a job or even between friends. One of the things I am most offended by, personally, is when a friend or colleague has a complaint against me, but will share it with others before sharing it with me, when all could be solved if they had come to me first.

Though we may find various ways of dealing with conflicts, the best way, in my opinion, is Jesus' way.
