Kyle's Korner

In Matthew 18, verse 21, Peter asks Jesus a question: "Lord, how often shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? Up to seven times?" I'm sure Peter thought that seven times of forgiving someone of the same wrong was more than generous, but Jesus did not commend Peter for his generosity. Instead, Peter is told to forgive even up to seventy times seven. Though some newer translations translate this as seventy-seven times (NIV & ESV), I believe the math equation makes more sense. I also feel that it bears some significance to what Jesus is saying.

$70 \times 7 = 490$ - Who is going to be able to count 490 wrongs, even if he tries? No one! But even if we try to think in terms of 490 times of forgiveness, we are still missing Jesus' point, hence the math equation (in my opinion). He could've said 490 times, but I believe the math equation is given to make us think about it (again, my personal opinion).

When we pray to God asking for forgiveness, how many times do we expect Him to forgive us? Seven times or seventy times seven? Do we expect Him to keep count? Fortunately for us, He doesn't (Psalm 103:12, Micah 7:19). When we ask, God forgives us, and, in the same way we are forgiven, we are expected to forgive others. If we wouldn't want God to stop forgiving us, then we shouldn't stop forgiving the sins of others.
